Course description and objectives

The Akkadian language is the oldest known Semitic language. This fact is of particular importance in the study of Semitic languages in general and Arabic in particular: in fact, Akkadian represents the oldest attestation of a language of the Semitic family, to which the Arabic language also belongs, and its knowledge allows us to better understand a number of features of the Arabic language and to better understand the position of the latter in the family of Semitic languages. Moreover, the study of the languages of ancient Iraq and of the texts in cuneiform writing is extremely important for reconstructing the history of ancient Mesopotamia and the remarkable achievements reached in this part of the ancient world. But the Akkadian language is also interesting in itself, especially in consideration of its long history through several stages:

1. Old Akkadian: the various dialects of Akkadian in use in the III millennium BC.
2. Old Babylon: 2000-1500 BC.
3. Middle Babylon: 1500-1000 BC.

4. Neo-Babylon: 1000-500 BC.
5. Late Babylon: 500 BC – I century AD.
6. Old Assyrian: 2000-1500 BC.
7. Middle Assyrian: 1500-1000 BC.
8. Neo-Assyrian: 1000-600 BC.

Methods

The basic elements of Akkadian grammar will be taught with lectures. Moreover, passages from Akkadian texts of various kinds (especially, letters) will be read in class, either making use of copies or on photos. In order to increase the ability of students to read cuneiform texts, trips to the Iraq Museum in Baghdad will also be organized, so that the students become familiar with original cuneiform tablets.
